

Gain clarity in 2022: Monetary policy and the yield curve

January 4, 2022

Monetary policy is set to become less supportive in 2022. Here's what it means for interest rates and the yield curve.

Three hikes in 2022?

At its December meeting, the Fed left policy rates unchanged near zero while signaling a willingness to hike as many as three times in 2022 to combat inflation. It also announced an acceleration in the pace of taper that will put the asset purchase program on track to end by March. Once taper ends, the Fed expects to begin raising rates, with an additional three hikes penciled in for 2023 and two more in 2024. This would bring the fed funds rate close to its estimated neutral level, where monetary policy is neither easy nor tight, of 2.5%.

Surprises are possible, so avoid making big bets on long duration assets

The direction of long-term Treasury yields depends on how the Fed responds to current inflation. The Fed is accelerating its removal liquidity because inflation has broadened, which has the potential to push 10-year yields higher. But the central bank must be careful not to act too aggressively, which could derail the economic recovery and cause a recession. Investors may want to remain flexible and be willing to adjust duration as the year progresses.

Global Perspectives 2022

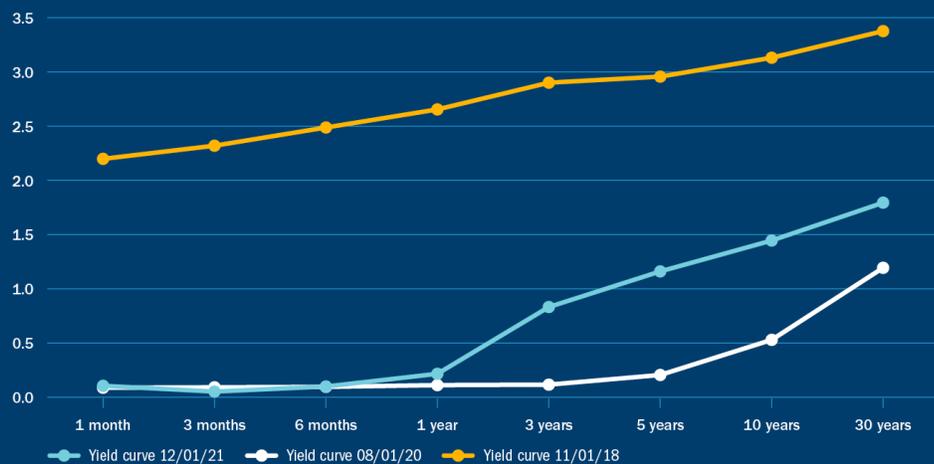

The upcoming year is all about finding clarity so investors can concentrate on their long-term goals. Focus on insights, backed by research, as we look beyond the noise we've experienced in the past year.

View all articles in this series

Edward Al-Hussainy
Senior Interest Rates Strategist

Rates are up from COVID lows, but they are unlikely to reach prepandemic highs

Source: Columbia Threadneedle Investments

Traditional inflation hedges are expensive

Many of the traditional inflation hedges, including commodities and Treasury inflation-protected securities (TIPS), are expensive and lock in negative real interest rates. A better way to hedge portfolios for inflation risk is by remaining defensive with duration and active within commodity-centric credit exposures.

Tighter financial conditions set the stage for greater volatility

As the Fed continues to withdraw liquidity from the financial system, we'll see tighter financial conditions, meaning wider credit spreads and greater volatility. This leaves risk assets more vulnerable to shocks. Finding winners and losers as rates increase puts greater emphasis on research that can distinguish between the two.

Rethinking the role of U.S. Treasuries in asset allocation

We're heading into an environment in which risk assets — like emerging market bonds and high yield — are both more expensive and more vulnerable. Picking the right bonds through credit research becomes essential in this environment. In addition, allocating to U.S. Treasuries, despite record-low yields, could provide a buffer against potentially higher equity and credit risk.

To find out more, call 800.426.3750
or visit columbiathreadneedle.com

Not Federally Insured	No Financial Institution Guarantee	May Lose Value
-----------------------	------------------------------------	----------------

The views expressed are as of the date given, may change as market or other conditions change and may differ from views expressed by other Columbia Management Investment Advisers, LLC (CMIA) associates or affiliates. Actual investments or investment decisions made by CMIA and its affiliates, whether for its own account or on behalf of clients, may not necessarily reflect the views expressed. This information is not intended to provide investment advice and does not take into consideration individual investor circumstances. Investment decisions should always be made based on an investor's specific financial needs, objectives, goals, time horizon and risk tolerance. Asset classes described may not be appropriate for all investors. Past performance does not guarantee future results, and no forecast should be considered a guarantee either. Since economic and market conditions change frequently, there can be no assurance that the trends described here will continue or that any forecasts are accurate.

Securities products offered through Columbia Management Investment Distributors, Inc., member FINRA. Advisory services provided by Columbia Management Investment Advisers, LLC.

Columbia Threadneedle Investments (Columbia Threadneedle) is the global brand name of the Columbia and Threadneedle group of companies.